Further details

An area of low pressure is expected to bring a spell of strong winds and heavy rain to southern England and south Wales on Saturday.

Gusts of 55-60 mph are likely inland with gusts of 60-70 mph around and just inland of south and west facing coasts and over hills. The strongest gusts are most likely across coastal southwest England and towards Hampshire/Isle of Wight where isolated gusts of up to 80 mph are possible in a few locations during the morning.

These winds will bring some very large waves to exposed coasts of southwest England with some dangerous conditions possible here.

Winds are expected to slowly ease from the west during the afternoon.

Reason for update

The potential impacts have been increased but at a very low likelihood with parts of the East Midlands removed from the warning. The end time has also been made later by 2 hours

Very low likelihood of medium impacts
